

Spot the difference: commuter Leigh Montagah, from Ealing, and one of Damien Hirst's works

Tube's head-turner art gallery

BORED passengers hit by yet another delay on the Tube now have an alternative to gazing blankly into space.

London Underground has transformed a Piccadilly line train into a rolling gallery featuring 84 works by contemporary artists. Every advertising space is filled with photographs, designs, paintings and poetry created by 42 artists, including Damien Hirst, Yoko

Ono and Vivienne Westwood. LU managing director Paul Godier admitted the work "will not be to everyone's taste" but said: "I hope it will make people sit up and think when they find a train that is not swamped with advertising."

The Art-Tube 01 exhibition, sponsored by Bloomberg, runs until 1 December.
